

Diane Webster

Wind Power

Wind gusts across lake in perpetual white caps rampaging surface water until shattered against shore in sprays of invisible shards sparkling upon roadside grass bowing in front of the power.

Diane Webster enjoys the challenge of picturing images into words to fit her poems. If she can envision her poem, she can write what she sees and her readers can visualize her ideas. Her work has appeared in The Evansville Review, Better Than Starbucks, Euphony, and other literary magazines.
